An Introduction to Center for East Asia Policy Studies, Brookings Institution

Established in 1998 as the Center for Northeast Asian Policy Studies (CNAPS), the Center for East Asia Policy Studies (CEAP) conducts research, analysis, and exchange to enhance policy development and understanding on the pressing political, security, and economic issues facing East Asia and the United States in the region. The Center's active series of programs provides expert insight and analysis into current events and emerging trends in East Asia, including Southeast Asia, and their implications for U.S. interests there. Its four Chairs and cadre of associated researchers conduct in-depth, cutting-edge research on understudied and looming issues concerning the region. Center research and analysis appear in the form of seminars, roundtable discussions, books, policy papers, web-based publications, Congressional testimony, and journal articles.

The principal areas of research and analysis for the Center include: relations across the Taiwan Strait and their international implications; U.S.-ROK relations and South Korea's growing role in the world; approaches to North Korea, particularly its nuclear and missile programs; Japanese politics and external policies, particularly regarding global trade and economics; U.S.-China strategic relations; integrating China into the world economy and the international political system; and Southeast Asia's growing strategic, economic, and diplomatic importance. Their analysis helps frame key debates and offers an array of policy recommendations for the U.S. government and governments in the region.

An Introduction to College of International Affairs, National Chengchi University

The creation of the College of International Affairs (CIA) was aimed at integrating academic resources, nurturing talents of international affairs for the Republic of China, responding to the demand of national development, and promoting the country's international status through internationalization. Initiative plans began in 1993 with intensive discussions and framework-building to meet the required terms for establishing a college. Permission was granted by the R.O.C. Ministry of Education in 2000, and the CIA was officially founded in August 2001.

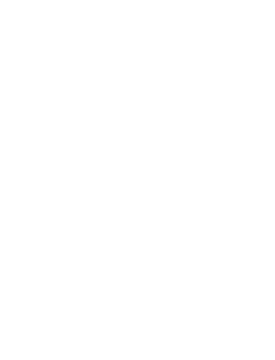

A leading academic unit in the field of international relations and diplomacy in Taiwan, Republic of China, the CIA prepares nearly 200 students each year for international affairs-related careers, and it has had a number of influential alumni, such as former R.O.C. vice president Vincent Siew, throughout the history of the country.

Located in Taipei City, the CIA is one of the most internationalized colleges at National Chengchi University, as well as an associate member of the Association of Professional Schools of International Affairs (APSIA).

The CIA consists of the following degree programs:

- Department of Diplomacy (B.A./M.A./ Ph.D.) (since 1930)
- Graduate Institute of East Asian Studies (M.A./Ph.D.) (since 1968)
- Graduate Institute of Russian Studies (M.A.) (since 1994)
- Programs in Japan Studies (M.A./Ph.D.) (since 2011)
- International Master's Program in International Studies (since 2012)
- Master Program of Middle Eastern and Central Asian Studies (in cooperation with College of Foreign Languages since 2015)
- Executive Master's Program in National Security and Mainland China Studies
- Executive Master's Program in Strategic and International Studies (under Department of Diplomacy)

In addition to the degree programs, the CIA has various centers or task forces focusing professionally on an array of international affairs. A most recent collective effort being coordinated by the CIA is a research concentration on major power relations in the Asia Pacific. The CIA encourages and welcomes all sorts of international exchanges between faculty members and between students to engage important academic or policy-oriented institutions that share similar research interest.
